Academic background:

Positions:

05.17 – current	Assistant professor/Post. Doc. Research area: Independence and accountability as well as judicial behavior in international courts with a special focus on the Court of Justice of the European Union.	PluriCourts University of Oslo
08.11 – 01.17	PhD in Political Science Title: «Choosing Agents: Members of the European Parliament and their Political Organizations Seen through Report Allocation» Questions: What are the considerations that European political groups make when delegating legislative tasks? How do these allocations impact national parties' choice of candidates? I relied on predictions from theories of legislative organization and democratic accountability which I tested using quantitative methods and original data. The position included 25% teaching obligations. I held lectures and led seminars in quantitative research methods, decision-making processes in the EU as well as advising on the bachelor's thesis.	Department of Political Science University of Oslo

I had two maternity leaves during my contract: One in the winter of 2012/13 and a second in the autumn of 2015.
